Set up your space for home dialysis

Ready to prepare your space for home dialysis? Having a place for everything, with everything in it's place, helps to make the most of your space. Having a place for each item saves you time and makes it easier to know what to order and when.

Try these tips to organize your space:

Keep supplies clean, dry and safe.

Supplies should be stored in a clean and dry location, away from access to pets. Keep the storage temperature within the recommended temperature range listed on the product instructions.

Maximize unused storage space.

Try sliding supplies under beds or stacking them in closets, out of sight. It isn't necessary for all supplies to be in your treatment room. Consider cleaning out a closet in a spare room.

Stash small supplies in moveable storage.

Plastic stacking drawers on wheels can hold small supplies—and be moved out of the way when not in use.

Order fewer supplies at a time.

Having one month of supplies on hand is ideal. However, it is possible to order small amounts if you have limited space and are available for more frequent deliveries.

Look at stacking higher, as well as wider.

Stack the same type of supply boxes together. When lifting, hold the box as close to your body as possible, just don't go over the height of your shoulders.

Take what you can out of boxes.

You may want to take some supplies out of boxes in your treatment area. Supplies should remain in their overwrap until ready for use. Your PD solution bags and cycler disposable sets should remain in boxes.
